Malcolm Pollard

Malcolm Pollard (1941-2002)

Malcolm Pollard was Head of Sculpture at Northampton School of Art and worked tirelessly to proclaim 'the place of Art in our society.'

Sadly his untimely death robbed us of the opportunity for him to display the full range of his work that he created over many decades.

In 2000 Malcolm Pollard wrote:

"I prefer to explore the edges of established disciplines to discover what lies between. Currently the margins between architecture and sculpture seem full of possibilities, as do the spaces between sculpture and gardening and poetry"

His sculpture ranged from the playful and sometimes erotic to the mystical such as the 'Risen Christ for St. Matthews Church Northampton alongside of Henry Moore's Madonna and Child and work by Graham Sutherland.

Although Malcolm did exhibit frequently when invited, he had decided some time ago "not to be a part of a system that regards art as property"

Statement

A collection of original works by the late Malcolm Pollard includes figurative and abstract paintings . We are grateful to the Pollard family for this opportunity to view more of Malcolm's work in his home town of Northampton.
